Cultural Announcements

Cultural Film: The Blue Eyes of Yonta: Feb. 13-15

The Blue Eyes of Yonta, Udju azul di Yonta. Guinea-Bissau, 1991. In Criolo with English subtitles. Color/90 min. Directed by Flora Gomes. Friday/Saturday, 8 p.m., Sunday, 2 p.m.

Yonta's eyes are not really blue... Perhaps the anonymous love-letters praising her blue eyes refer to her azure eye shadow, striking against her burnished skin...Set in the tiny West African country of Guinea-

Bissau and former Portuguese colony which achieved independence in 1973, it is the story, on one side, of a beautiful young woman Yonta (Maysa Marta). She represents the younger generation which has grown up since the liberation, their heads full of dreams of their own. On the other side, Vincente (Antonio Simao Mendes), a disenchanted hero of the independence struggle, has grudgingly adapted himself to post-revolutionary society. While revolutionary heroes cope with living in the past, Yonta, the fountainhead of the new generation, makes peace with the unwelcome present... The movie looks candidly at the filmmaker's country with all its problems, yet regards its characters with warmth and tenderness. "A lucid and at the same time joyous film." Le Monde "A richly shaded vision of a post-colonial African society on the verge of losing hope." New York Times.

Performing Arts-Concerned Black Students Film: Glory

Hailed as one of the most authentic Civil War movies ever made, Glory celebrates the bravery of the men of the Massachusetts 54th Volunteer infantry, the war's first all-black regiment. In Oscar-caliber performances, Denzel Washington plays Trip, a run away slave, and Morgan Freeman appears as the regiment's first black officer who is its conscience in the struggle against racism within the army itself.

It is up to the men to convince their white officer, played by Matthew Broderick, that they will make good soldiers. They turn out to be much more. The 54th suffered enormous losses under the battlefield code of the time, which required troops to advance in the face of enemy fire. The battle for which the regiment went down in history occurred July 18, 1863. The performance of the troops on that fateful day encouraged the Union to recruit other blacks to the cause, over 180,000 in all. Historians say their participation may have been a decisive factor in turning the tide of the war.

Not since John Ford shot his Civil War scenes has a film presented such a wide angle-large scale battle photography. This is a vivid portrait of men who among their first acts as free men volunteered to pay for their freedom with their lives. Newsday called it, 'Stunning-a motion picture of importance.' The Wall Street Journal said, 'A great American movie.' Thursday, February 12; 9:15 p.m.; Harris.

Next week's film: Bogart and Bacall in Key Largo.

Roses are red, Violets are blue . . .

If you can complete this poem badly, this night is for you. The Freehand Press is sponsoring a night of Bad, we mean really bad, love poetry at Bob's on Friday, Feb. 13 at 10 p.m. And we want you to come and give us your best . . . well actually worst. . . lovey dovey mushy poems.
